By TIM BIRCH, REFORMER. NUMB. CXV.

LONDON, SATURDAY, June 24, 1732.

Continuation of the Vision, occasion'd by the Ridotto al Fresco.

AS soon as the Goddess of Pleasure had ended her licentious Summons to her Votaries, the whole Croud separated themselves immediately, and, issuing tumultuously out of the four Portals, took their Way to the Temples that were erected at the End of the adjoining Vistas, as their different Passions and Inclinations led them: All seem'd equally eager to attain the Point in View, but every different Class affected to despise and undervalue the rest; for, tho' Pleasure was what they all coveted, the Means of procuring it were directly opposite; and neither could indulge another with what he despis'd himself. I found my own Heart as much inclining to the soft Invitation, as any of the Multitude; the Words of the Goddess had a peculiar Sweetness that charm'd me; I was hardly able to resist the delicate Emotion: All my Difficulty seem'd to be where to chuse; I turn'd to my Guide for Advice, but I had lost her in the Croud, and a grave sober Matron, in the Habit of a Roman Vestal, had taken her Place; her Face had an Air of Majesty temper'd with a true feminine Softness which made her perfectly lovely; I look'd on her with Awe and Veneration, and she bid me follow her and be wise. Her Name was VIRTUE, and, tho' I was somewhat abash'd with the Solemnity of her Figure, I resolv'd, at last, to obey her. The first of the four Fabricks she led me to was situated in the Midst of a most delicious Garden, surrounded with Groves and Fountains, Grots and Flowers; and, in the most delightful Spots of Beauty and Pleasure, Numbers of happy People had group'd themselves in all the Attitudes of Luxury to animate the Landskip, and add a Grace to the whole Scene. The Building itself was in the Asiatique Taste, rather pleasurable than grand, and contriv'd rather for Show than Strength: It consisted of a great Number of Apartments, which spread out to a considerable Length, and adorn'd with open Balustrades, and gilded Statues. The Windows were full of laughing, toying People of both Sexes, who seem'd made only for themselves, and one another: Nothing but Joy and Happiness seem'd to reside amongst them; Pleasure was the Business of their Lives, and Care and Sorrow none of their Acquaintance. Nothing was heard but the softest Sounds of Musick, and the amorous Whispers of a thousand Lovers; the very Air caught the infectious Sound, the Birds echoed back the Harmony from the Woods, and all the licentious Choirs beneath them warbled in the Close. My Heart relented amid such a Variety of Enjoyments, and I grew almost tir'd of my Company; I long'd to mingle among those happy Mortals, and taste the Pleasures of this divine Elysium: My Guide, reading the Sentiments of my Heart in my Face, told me this was the House of Lust, and that if Pleasure seem'd the Inhabitant of the Front, Pain, Sorrow, and Repentance harbour'd in the gloomy Recesses behind it. This Account was so inconsistent with the Image before my Eyes, that I half hesitated to believe it, and my Guide, by a secret Way, convey'd me round to be myself a Witness of the Truth: Sure, and fatal indeed was the Conviction; the Appearance and the Fact were widely different; those, who seem'd so happy without, were most miserable within; Jealousy was a Fiend that follow'd some with a Whip of Scorpions, and Revenge assassinated others in their full Career of Bliss; Disease and Want had worn Multitudes to the Bone, and Satiety had sicken'd the Appetites of the rest; the whole Scene was that of a Lazar House, and the Groans of the Tortur'd the only Musick of the Place; tir'd of so sad a View, I conjur'd my Guide to conduct me from it, and save me from such Destruction. She complied with some Pleasure, and thro' another secret Path suddenly convey'd me to a new Vista, at the End of which was a Range of Trees so closely and artfully imbower'd, that it seem'd a vegetable Palace, and here and there certain Stone Pavillions were so admirably plac'd, that 'twas hard to say whether they, or the Wood were the Decorations of each other; all was so much of a Piece that nothing was wanting, and nothing could be spar'd: 'Twas a rural Scene and sacred to the God of Wine; but contriv'd so curiously, and finish'd with such Expence, that it appear'd no other than a Retreat for the Noble, and a Place of Pleasure to the most elegant. In the Midst of these blessed Shades, in every Pavillion, and under every Roof of this verderous Architecture were collected the boon Companions of the World; the whole Vintage flow'd in a continual Tide around them, the Vine cluster'd upon every Tree, and every Bush presented them with Garlands of Roses, fresh as the Spring. The Noise of Mirth and Riot ascended to the Stars, and every Note of sprightly Musick pour'd their most enlivening Melody on the Ear. I was ravish'd with the Sound, I was smit with the Prospect, my Wishes grew as frolick as theirs, the Bowl sparkl'd at my Lips, and I was swimming down with the Stream at large, when Virtue severely corrected my Extravagance, and bid me once more tremble at the Consequence: She led me insensibly away, and mingling among the obscurest Shade, shew'd me the dire Effects of Intemperance in Wine as well as Love, and bid me be warn'd to avoid it: Here lay the Drunkard dying with the excessive Draught, here languish'd the enervated Reveller surfeited with his own Debauchery; here the Dropsy swell'd his monstrous Tympany, and the Gout stretch'd out the groaning Patient on the Rack; here pin'd the prodigal Spendthrift who had swallow'd his Estate in his Cups, and here the sottish Murtherer wept over his dying Friend that the Madness of Wine had causelessly slain.——Frighten'd at so horrid a Reverse I beg my Guide to redeem me again from the Mischief I should henceforth study to avoid: I was now conducted into an Avenue exceedingly grand and ornamental; the Trees were tall and full-grown, but cut as even at the Tops as a Line could be laid; the Sides of the Walk below were adorn'd with Vases, Fountains and Statues, and the Whole terminated in a majestick Structure of the Corinthian Order, with magnificent Porticoes, Columns, Arches, Capitals, and Cornices: Nothing could be more stately or august; nothing could be more wonderful than the Materials, but the Workmanship, and each was worthy of the other. The Crouds that throng'd in and out at the Gates of this Palace were more sumptuously array'd and appear'd of more Consequence than the Inhabitants of the other two; but if they were more important, they were less happy, and what they gain'd in Show, they lost in Substance. This was the Abode of Ambition; here that Idol of the World was seated on a Throne of Gold, and circled her Temples with Jewels; here she receiv'd the Homage of Mankind, and dealt out her gaudy Favours; the Proud, the Vain, and Ostentatious bow'd round her perpetually, and Flattery was the Incense they offer'd at her Foot-Stool; while she, like Fortune, scatter'd her Gifts at Random, and put it into the Power of Chance to bless or undo Mankind. Not a little pleas'd with so fair an Opportunity, I prepar'd to join myself with the rest of the craving Crew, and make my Importunity a sufficient Title to Preferment; but my friendly Guide with unusual Earnestness with-held me, and added that Ambition also was Vanity. Immediately she led me behind the Throne of this vaunted Idol, and there appear'd one of the most shocking Scenes that the Sun beholds in his annual Progress: All the Calamities that startle human Nature most were here assembled; the Assassin's Digger, the envenom'd Present, the Engines of Death and Infamy, and all the Tools of publick and private Oppression. Here the Needy suffer'd, and the Undone rag'd; here Envy pin'd, and Disappointment mourn'd; there Conspiracy plotted, and Friendship betray'd; Dissimulation flatter'd, and Vengeance destroy'd; here even the most Fortunate bewail'd the Success they could not bear, and Monarchs curs'd the Power that was their Ruin. Nothing appear'd easy, all was Vexation, Pain and Misery, and all acknowledg'd their Hopes, Expectations, Dependencies, and Acquirements vain.——Disappointed anew, I follow'd my Guide, for the last Time, without any further Expostulation, who now led me into a Walk so thickly shadow'd with meeting Trees, so wild, so lonely, and savage, that it struck me with a Horror I had never known before: At the End of it appear'd a rude and Gothick Building almost in Ruins, and cover'd over with Moss and Ivy; it was surrounded with a double Mote, the Walls were battlemented a-top, and many broken Towers made it look venerable and formidable together: We enter'd at the End of a Drawbridge, a little Wicket, portcullis'd over with Iron, and, thro' a little, dark, and silent Passage, arriv'd, at last, in a large Hall over-hung with Cobwebs, and darken'd with Dust. Here, by a dim Light that faintly glimmer'd thro' a painted Window, we discover'd a wrinkled, hoary, old Man sitting on an immense Heap of Riches, and counting it carefully over with a Look of Suspicion and Fear together: Round about him were Piles of Jewels that could hardly shine thro' the Rubbish that obscur'd them: Gold and Silver Ingots beyond Rate, Number, or Value reach'd the Cieling; and Golden Dust incumber'd the Floor: This was the God Plutus, and these the Treasures he dealt out to the Worldlings his Votaries. A Number of these now attended him with the lowest and basest Prostrations, but, even while they worshipp'd they cheated their God, and with great Apprehension and Hatred of one another endeavour'd to conceal the Fraud. The Evils of Avarice put on no Gloss to conceal themselves, they are open and apparent; he who amasses a World of Wealth, lays up an equal Stock of Care, and toils beside for what he can never enjoy: Doubt and Fear are his Companions, Oppression and Dishonesty his Slaves, and Ignominy and Curses his Reward. But, tho' this was apparent, I could hardly resist the Temptation; the Quantity of Riches surpriz'd me, and the Uses it was capable of charm'd me; but, in this very Instant of Irresolution, Virtue took Occasion to reclaim me once more to herself, and, after having again bid me beware, left me in the Middle of the visionary Scene to make the Application of her Precepts. The Moment she was gone, I turn'd round to take another Survey of the inchanting Prospect, when the Whole vanish'd away at once, and I wak'd immediately to regret the Disappointment with the more Sensibility and Pain.

Epigram.

WHere-ever Honesty you seek; the Mind
Must not to lofty Prospects be confin'd.
The low will equally your Search delude:
The middle Rank makes your Enquiry good.
There Grandeur tempts not Vertue to receed:
Nor, as in those, is she quite starv'd by Need.

On Wedneſday Night the Prince of Wales, the Earl of Scarborough, the Lord Gage, and ſeveral other Perſons of Diſtinction, were preſent at the Ridotto al Freſco at Vaux-Hall, where the Entertainment was managed with Decency and good Order, a Guard of 100 Soldiers being poſted about the Houſe: About Two in the Morning his Royal Highneſs went away, but the greateſt Part of the Company ſtaid till Five in the Morning.

There are Letters from Jamaica by the Shark Sloop of War, which ſay, that the Whites having forced the Intrenchments of the run-away Negroes in the Mountains, had cut off great Part of them, forcing the reſt to fly into the Woods; which Victory was owing in a great Meaſure to the Courage and Conduct of an old-experienc'd Serjeant, who lately belong'd to one of the Regiments which are returned from thence to Ireland.

Yeſterday the Lady of Sir William Morrice, Bart. was brought to Bed of a Daughter, at his Houſe near the Admiralty at Whiteball.

Five Servants belonging to Mr. Selby, a Whitſter at Mitcham, having been bit by a mad Dog ſome Time ago, in a dangerous Manner, four of them were dipt in Salt Water, and are like to do well; but the other, to whom his Maſter had lent a Horſe to go to Graveſend to be dipt, went another Way in the Country and neglected the ſame; and on Monday laſt he died in a raving Condition.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Hague, June 27. N. S.

ALL our Advices from France, the Netherlands, and even from Spain, aſſure us, that the Spaniſh Fleet is bound to Sicily, where the Court of Spain has a Party; as has been diſcovered by a Letter from the Prince de Reſulzano, Prætor of Palermo, to Don Joſeph Patinho, which was intercepted. The four Chiefs of the Corſicans have been ſeized and impriſoned at Baſtia. If this was done by the Genoeze, or German Generals, without their Conſent, (for they might deſire it, for ought we know, to parry the popular Odium) it was as ungenerous an Action as ever was heard of. Yeſterday an Expreſs from Mynheer Aſſendelft, their High-Mightineſſes Reſident at Bruſſels, brought the ſurprizing News, that the Oſtenders had taken, and carried into their Port, a Ship belonging to our Weſt India Company, by way of Reprizal for their Eaſt-India Ship, which the Veſſels belonging to the Engliſh and Dutch Eaſt-India Companies took and ſunk at the Mouth of the Ganges about two Years ago; and, that having complained thereof to the Court of Bruſſels, he was anſwered, that it was done by the Emperor's Order.

Paris, June 23. N. S. Since the Difference between the Miniſtry and the Parliament, all the Counſellors were ſent for to Court, which ſtruck a general Conſternation. The Deputies of the Parliament, that went to Compiegne on Tueſday, were to the Number of 38, including the Gens du Roy; who being introduced into the King's Apartment, they found there the Duke of Orleans, the Duke du Maine, the Prince de Dombes, the Count d'Eu, the Cardinal de Fleury, the Chancellor, the Duke de Charoſt, the Duke de Bethune, the Duke de la Tremoille, the Duke de la Rochefoucault, and the Marſhal de Villars: The King ſaid to them, I ſent for you to hear the Arret of my Council read: Then turning to the Secretary of State, his Majeſty ſaid, Maurepas, read it: Which when he had done, the King added, I will ſuſpend the greater Effects of any Reſentment: I order you to continue the Adminiſtration of Juſtice to my Subjects; and I will ſeverely puniſh thoſe, who ſhall diſregard me, and diſappoint my People. Then the Count de Maurepas deliver'd the Arret to the firſt Preſident; whereupon his Majeſty ſaid to him, I charge you, Mr. firſt Preſident, to ſee that this Arret be tranſcribed at the Foot of that of the Parliament of the 13th Inſtant. I defer for this Time the Effects of my juſt Diſpleaſure with my Parliament, which has been diſobedient to me: Go and mind your Buſineſs. The firſt Preſident offer'd to make ſome Reply; but the King ſaid to him, Hold your Tongue; Be gone. And all the Deputies withdrew accordingly. On the 20th, all the Chambers of the Parliament met; and after the firſt Preſident had given them an Account of what had paſſed, the King's Arret was read to them: Upon which, all the Preſidents and Counſellors withdrew, without ſpeaking one Word: Some Hours after, they went to the firſt Preſident's, to deſire him to intercede with the King that they might reſign their Places. In ſhort, they returned to their reſpective Chambers of the Parliament, to make their Reſignations; and we are told, that they carried them to the Chancellor's, and left them with his Secretary, not finding him at home. The Gens du Roy went to Compiegne the 21ſt, upon this Step of the Preſidents and Counſellors. The ſame Day came a Lettre de cachet from thence, commanding all the Members of the Great Chamber to repair thither immediately, which they did accordingly. The Advocates of the Parliament have done no Buſineſs ſince this Day ſe'nnight; neither will they, till the Parliament reſume their Functions. It is impoſſible to expreſs the Concern of this City upon the King's Arret. The Muſketeers are order'd not to be abſent from their Poſts. We are impatient to ſee who will get the better, the Miniſtry or the Parliament; but moſt People here ſeem to ſide with the Parliament.

Cadiz, June 10. N. S. People here do not apprehend any Fear about our great Armament. It is concluded by every one, they are going againſt the Turks of Oran and Algiers. It is certain, they cannot deſign againſt a Chriſtian Prince, as they carry ſeveral thouſand Tons of Water, and Straw, and other Neceſſaries, which they could find in any Country but where they are going. Beſides, it is ſaid that ſix large old Ships are loaded with hewed Stone and Sacks of Lime, to ſink before the Port of Algiers; and this they would never do to the Port of any Chriſtian Power. In ſhort we verily believe they are poſitively deſigned for the Place we mentioned.
